After The Walrus destroyed her apartment building, January O'Kaye started sharing a place with local easygoing criminal element, No Good Nicky. Nicky just so happens to be duelling January's best gal pal/ Alien-American, Marissa Leepthrokk. Nobody knows what Novelty Cow's deal is.

Nicky pulled a credit union heist with a bunch of 1940s-ish gangsters, and now they won't leave the apartment! Nicky asked them to leave. It didn't work. January cosplayed as a flapper, even though that's friggin' nonsense. That didn't work either. We last saw Nicky asking January to help him with a tissue box. I ain't touchin' that one.

Today's marquee color palette is from Mickey and/or Minnie's sprite from Mickey Mousecapade for NES.

Resident fangirl Sheepica Shebwooley-Kattan and local hunk Harlan Shebwooley-Kattan are half-siblings and the children of well-to-do folks. Harlan is the secret identity of Caterang, which he's managed to keep from his sister and everyone else (despite its painful obviousness.)

At the end of her bout with the Green Shadow, Strawberry and Lemonade expressed their desire to get more powerful so they'd be more prepared the next time their powerful new enemy strikes. Caterang has offered to train them.

Geez, let me try to make this more succinct. I'm using up all the bandwidth.

Sheepica followed her brother Harlan only to discover that he's really Caterang. Unbeknownst to him, she kept following and watched him train Strawberry and Lemonade in the woods. Strawberry is trying to find new strength within her to fight The Green Shadow more effectively, and Lemonade likes to invite herself to things. Anyway, Lemonade got her new power in the form of Super Citrus Lemonade. After Sheepica was discovered by the Alliterative 5, they captured her with their tree mech, Timberzorg-O. Super Citrus Lemonade saved Sheepica with her new fruit-headed powers, and Sheepica's cover was blown.
